Policy

Whenever possible, all investigative staff must contact the reporter during an investigation. Reporters are often witnesses to past and present incidents and have a unique knowledge of a family's circumstances; thus, they may have relevant information to the investigation.

When an investigation is completed, the assigned Worker provides information learned throughout the course of the investigation as follows. The amount of information to be disclosed to the reporter is dependent on his or her relationship to the child(ren) or family, as indicated:

- "Lay reporters" may be told that the matter was investigated and, if necessary, any appropriate measures that were taken by CP&P to ensure the safety and well-being of the child(ren). If a lay reporter requests this information in writing, it must be provided to him or her by completing this form (CP&P Form 26-64). However, no specific details learned about the child or family shall be disclosed.
- Examples of "lay reporters" include a relative or a neighbor.
- Physicians, medical staff, school personnel, law enforcement, resource parents, and non-custodial parents may be provided with the disposition of the investigation as well as information necessary to a child's care, treatment, assessment, evaluation, or supervision.
- Law enforcement, upon written request, must be provided with case information if it is required for an ongoing investigation of child abuse or neglect. CP&P staff shall consult a Deputy Attorney General (DAG) upon receipt of such a request.
- If the investigative finding is Substantiated, CP&P Forms 9-32 and 9-33 must be completed to advise law enforcement of this finding within 10 days of the conclusion of the investigation.
